

PH.D. IN EDUCATION AND HUMAN RESOURCE STUDIES, HIGHER EDUCATION LEADERSHIP SPECIALIZATION

The Ph.D. in Education and Human Resource Studies, Higher Education Leadership Specialization prepares students to work as higher education administrators and leaders to address critical issues impacting colleges and universities.

By centering equity and justice in the program's coursework, students gain analytical, research, and critical thinking skills that help learners address contemporary issues in higher education policy and practice. Program graduates learn to apply and create knowledge that leads to transformation in higher education.

This hybrid program is structured in a cohort model where students take coursework online in the fall and spring semester using synchronous video conferencing. During the summers, students take a one-week course in Fort Collins. Specific dates for summer engagements are determined by the program faculty.
